EVERYTHING BUT THE HOUSE OPENS ITS DOORS IN THE SUNSHINE STATE

(March 25, 2015 – Naples, Fla.) The popular online estate sale company Everything But The House (EBTH) launches its first official sale in Florida on March 25, 2015. The Cincinnati startup has a large bidder base in regions across the country, but local sales mean more convenience and more interesting items for its customers in Southwest Florida. With home market turnover and unique finds – from antiques to home goods, the Sunshine State is the perfect new market for EBTH buyers and sellers alike.

Now presenting sales from Bonita Springs to Naples, EBTH offers benefits to both buyers and sellers, combining high-touch with high-tech. From a seller's perspective, whether an estate or downsizing, EBTH offers a full-service solution – its employees take care of the entire process from photographing to cataloging and marketing items, they literally handle everything but the house – a first in the estate sale industry. The company's philosophy is to help empty clients' spaces wall to wall and make downsizing or selling an estate less of a hassle.

EBTH also offers a truly unique buying experience. The site's high-quality photography and user-friendly layout make it easy to locate and track items from across the country. All items start at a price of $1 and sales last for seven days. Last-minute bids add 5 additional minutes to the clock, giving everyone a fair shot at an item. Estimated shipping costs can be calculated instantly, leaving no mystery for the customer. Buyers have the option of picking up in person or shipping directly to them.

"We're very excited to open in Southwest Florida, a market that feels like a natural fit," said Andy Nielsen, president and CEO of EBTH. "As the largest generation in history retires, downsizes and relocates, there is a great need for a full-service business to help these people transition through their major life events."
